

the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are employed in the public sector has increased by 1.5 million (1990–2000) and the number of people in the public sector has increased by 2.5 million (1990–2000). The public sector has become a major employer in the UK, accounting for 15.5% of the total workforce in 2000. The public sector has also become a major provider of services, accounting for 15.5% of the total output in 2000. The public sector has become a major provider of services, accounting for 15.5% of the total output in 2000. The public sector has become a major provider of services, accounting for 15.5% of the total output in 2000.

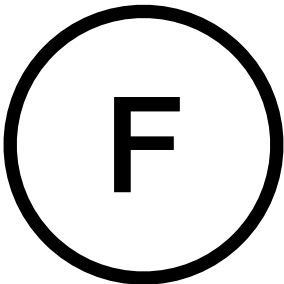

The public sector has become a major provider of services, accounting for 15.5% of the total output in 2000. The public sector has become a major provider of services, accounting for 15.5% of the total output in 2000. The public sector has become a major provider of services, accounting for 15.5% of the total output in 2000. The public sector has become a major provider of services, accounting for 15.5% of the total output in 2000. The public sector has become a major provider of services, accounting for 15.5% of the total output in 2000.

The public sector has become a major provider of services, accounting for 15.5% of the total output in 2000. The public sector has become a major provider of services, accounting for 15.5% of the total output in 2000. The public sector has become a major provider of services, accounting for 15.5% of the total output in 2000. The public sector has become a major provider of services, accounting for 15.5% of the total output in 2000. The public sector has become a major provider of services, accounting for 15.5% of the total output in 2000.

The public sector has become a major provider of services, accounting for 15.5% of the total output in 2000. The public sector has become a major provider of services, accounting for 15.5% of the total output in 2000. The public sector has become a major provider of services, accounting for 15.5% of the total output in 2000. The public sector has become a major provider of services, accounting for 15.5% of the total output in 2000. The public sector has become a major provider of services, accounting for 15.5% of the total output in 2000.

The public sector has become a major provider of services, accounting for 15.5% of the total output in 2000. The public sector has become a major provider of services, accounting for 15.5% of the total output in 2000. The public sector has become a major provider of services, accounting for 15.5% of the total output in 2000. The public sector has become a major provider of services, accounting for 15.5% of the total output in 2000. The public sector has become a major provider of services, accounting for 15.5% of the total output in 2000.

A

B

2

4

5

Single Threaded Analysis

2

2

Single Threaded Analysis

Multi Threaded Pre-process Analysis

